After spending the most money in a federal election year since 2012, the so-called Big Six committees ended 2018 with a combined reserve of $1.5 million heading into a legislative election year, according to reports filed with the New Jersey Election Law Enforcement Commission (ELEC).

The two state parties and four legislative leadership committees raised $6.2 million and spent $5.4 million during 2018. The focus was mainly on federal congressional elections though there also were special legislative elections to fill ten seats. This year, there will be contests for all 80 Assembly seats.

Jeff Brindle, ELEC’s Executive Director, said it is normal for party coffers to be depleted after an election year. A year ago, after the governor’s seat and all 120 legislative seats were decided in 2017, the Big Six committees ended up with $738,454 in combined cash-on-hand versus $1.5 million this year.

“Perhaps not surprisingly, the two committees with the most at stake this fall carried over the largest balances among their respective parties,” said Brindle. “The Democratic Assembly Campaign Committee reported $635,823 as of December 31 while the Assembly Republican Victory Committee reported $187,031.”

Brindle noted that the two state parties, which were the biggest spenders in 2018, ended up with the smallest cash reserves- $117,803 for the Republican State Committee and $102,682 for the Democratic State Committee.

With Democrats now in control of the governor’s seat and both legislative houses, their fund-raising has improved since four years ago, when a Republican occupied the governor’s post. Democratic fund-raising, spending, cash-on-hand and net worth all were up compared to 2014. Republican fund-raising, spending and cash-on-hand was down compared to four years ago, though net worth was up slightly.

Brindle said he is hopeful pending legislation recommended by ELEC that requires disclosure by independent committees and increases contribution limits for candidates and parties will boost the fortunes of party committees.

“During the past decade, there has been a tremendous shift in influence from parties and candidates to independent groups. Hopefully, these legislative changes will create a better balance by helping to restore influence to the parties,” he said.

State parties and legislative leadership committees are required to report their financial activity to the Commission on a quarterly basis. The reports are available on ELEC’s website at www.elec.state.nj.us.
